The Metropolis Journal-Republican says about the evidence in the case against Sam Reese, who was yesterday sentenced at Metropolis to twenty-three years for the murder of his cousin, Will Scott:

A general summary of the evidence shows that Scott had a jug of whiskey beneath his kitchen floor, hidden from his wife. Reese came to Scott's on Friday evening, October 8, 1897, about dark to see Scott. They drank, went out of the house to the barn, returned to the house, drank again. Scott had a six-shot 32-calther revolver, Reese had a knife. They went up the lane leading toward the big road, returned to the feet condition.

HOSPITAL.

Little Room for Residents or Strangers.

The city hospital is taxed almost to its capacity, and there is little room for more. There are daily received applications from foreign aupers for admission to the hospital. out these must be refused, and could not legally be granted, even if there were no one in the hospital.

Mayor Lang has decided, in regard to the purchase of $150 worth Dr. Edwards, Ear, Eye, Nose and of surgical instruments for the hospital, that it is not the duty of the ity to furnish them, but the duty of the city physician. The motion to furnish the instruments was made at the last meeting of the council by Chairman Robertson, of the hospital committee, and defeated.

BLOOD POISONING

Threatens Lee Taylor, Young Man

Who Finds Himself Here Destitute Circumstances,

Lee Taylor is the name of a young man who reached the city last night on the Cumberland river steamer and applied today to Mayor Lang for addale, Miss., and is here in a destitute condition, with threatened blood poisoning in one foot.

Taylor is an honest, intelligent ooking young man, and on October 6th, last cut his foot at Clarksville while hewing logs. Owing to the swollen condition of it, it could never be stitched up, and has never healed. Blood poisoning is now threatened, and young Taylor thinks with a little treatment and attention he would be able to continue his journey in a week. He has written his father at Troy, Ind., bis home, for funds, and expects a reply in one

He was sent to City Physician Rivers this morning to have his in-juries dressed, and Mayar Lang said he would assist him on his way. Passed Away Yesterday-While a few days in the city hospital might be the means of saving his foot or limb, the hospital is now crowded.
